Opal, a luxurious gemstone, sources its finest samples from the associated stones of the Coober Pedy gem mine in Australia. It is considered a national gem of Australia and is renowned for its unique play-of-color effect. The English term "opal" is derived from the Latin word opalus, which means "to perceive a change in color." Pandora is a luxury stone sourced from the Pandora species of the Amanbai luxury stone mine in Brazil. It is a premium stone material with qualities akin to crystalline jade. Predominantly milky white in color, some specimens have undergone prolonged geological compression and dramatic temperature shifts, resulting in a distinct jade-like crystalline structure. When exposed to strong light, it may reveal subtle sparkling inclusions.

As a building material, it offers a more pronounced sense of depth and texture than traditional jade, earning it the name “ Crystalline Jade” in the world of stone.
